and alignment were all in keeping with their costume.

After the troops had passed, the General's Ministers, and many of the officers strolled towards the place to have a look through it at leisure. I had gone on ahead in order to get some photos of the private apartments. When just inside the bowser of troops I was invited by three Chinamen to have some tea, which was laid out on the

the Imperial Palace. The British can-

Cushions were spread around, and, in addition to, most delicious tea, they had various kinds of dried and crystallized fruits, and—some Huntley and Palmers'—and the rest came along, and within a short time we had all taking part in an absolutely univocal social reunion. The East India Company's tea, which I had wished long as host to their conquerors, was a delightful bower of curious tins in the centre of the Forbiddin City.

Along the sacred ground, among the stones of which were lovely forms, which, unlike other things about, were flourishing on neglect, and high above us, supported on its crutches, rose a great tree, from which some might say was projected an ominous image of the Emperor, a prophetic of the remark: "Why lumbereth it the ground?"

There was little to join the party, and there was little to say. The voices were loud, and the mixture of languages such that one would frequently be in doubt, even being aware to be the right one of the neighbour to pass the faintest word.

slant the sky. Through the interstices

Although much had evidently been stowed away, there were still numbers of interesting and beautiful ornaments, about some of the apartments—china, carved ivory, books, and pictures. People were anxious to get some little souvenirs of their visit to the palace, but few shy about taking anything; after a while some of them got over that shyness.

curious to examine the contents. Then he seemed to have a sudden change of mind, and so carefully closed the box for a few moments. Then he took out a small bag, and emptied its contents into his pockets, and seemed intent on examining the pattern of the ceiling.

He appeared to be so interested in it that he must have forgotten to look at the box, but back that bag of jade in his hand. There were some, however, who went in for long-sightedness in the same old-fashioned fashion. There was a dark room in the corner, and the stuff was stored away in boxes, which were examined one by one, and a number of vases taken from the top of a pile of jade.

A Frenchman managed to take away a gold-crowned vase by crushing it with his hands and then putting it under his coat.

Another was being carried off by two Englishmen, when they were seen by a Mandarin, who came to the English officer, and they were made to give it up.

The pictures taken were of little value in comparison with those too heavy to be conveniently carried, and the immense treasures which are probably scarcely noticed in this mysterious palace.

Presently a Russian officer, at the head of 100 soldiers, came on the shore and hoisted the Union Jack. The Russian troops and the British officers interfered and hoisted the Russian flag. The Russian troops threatened to fire on the British. The matter was afterwards explained and peace patched up.

HOW TO TREAT A TROUBLESOME CORN.

To remove a troublesome corn or blister:—
First soak the corn or blister in warm water so often, till then pare it down with a sharp knife, until the corn is so shallow as to be possible without drawing blood. Then apply Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice a day, rubbing vigorously for five minutes after each application. A corn plaster should be worn for a few days to protect it from the weather. As a general liniment for sprains, rheumatism, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. For sale by All Dealers.

It is an unusual—ought not to be—written unprecedented occurrence for an officer to proceed from the Yangtze to the Chiao Yang to the Yangtze, China. This, however, only emphasizes greatly the importance of this in the Far East, has increased the status of statesmen. Nothing has been so important to the return of the Centurion, its flag, if she remains on the Yangtze, she shall at last have four battleships to her, and the air which France has combined will shortly have a new water. It is a significant position in the naval power in the world, in the East, it is understood that Vice Admiral Bridges was offered the China Station, but was unable to accept it.

Wilson tried to get Mrs Bonnes' cook from her, and actually went to Mrs Bonnes house when she was out, and offered her more money - The next time he came at a big dinner Mr Bonnes said to her "Somebody had been talking about Mrs Bonnes you know Mrs Wilson?"

"I do not!"

"You believe not," said Mrs Bonnes, "she has been on my cook. I understand."

"A little bit."

...the line of march received each general salute with a shout of approval. The marching was in perfect order and the perfect cordiality of his greeting to the crowd was most marked. He stood out and led the cheers, waving his cap above his head the while.

His enthusiasm was not certainly called for in the spectators by the sight of the man. In plain words, they were simply a bunch of their countrymen, who are so prone to crying "Yip Yarmee." There was no cheering, and the uniforms being new, after the long march up, but that the many of the men should be equally so, is quite excusable. Some of them are blooded and returned upon their march with white helmets, and some had not time to change their old military patch appearance, and their own beating
